THE FORT NEAR PADUCAH.

A special dispatch from Cairo, Jan. 4th, says of the reported fight at or near Viola:

By Gen. Wallace's report, which was received today, it appears that the story of his having encountered the enemy is incorrect. When reinforcements were received from Paducah, an order was received from Gen. Smith to return with his command to Paducah, no encounter having occurred.

The Cincinnati Enquirer of yesterday publishes a letter from Paducah, dated January 1st, in which occurs the following statement:

General Wallace had left this post last Saturday night with four hundred cavalry, and was scouring the country surrounding Mayfield, endeavoring to entrap the notorious King. Sunday morning our scouts brought in word to General Wallace, who was then at Viola, that the enemy was advancing with a heavy force against him. About three o'clock in the morning our pickets were driven in, and toward noon the enemy, pouring in from every side, their forces numbered about two thousand infantry, and six hundred cavalry. General Wallace ordered his men to fall back on this side of the creek; the bridge over it was burned, and the stream filled with all sorts of obstructions.

Just as the rear guard of our forces crossed the creek, they were fired into by the enemy's advance, but without effect. After falling back about a mile this side of Viola, to a more convenient position, Gen. Wallace halted to give them battle, although it was supposed that their forces outnumbered ours four to one. It was then that reinforcements were sent for. The rebels fearing that they were being drawn into an ambush, commenced falling back, and were closely followed by our galling General.

Our advance continued harassing their rear all the way to Mayfield, endeavoring to persuade them to halt until the reinforcements could arrive, but to no avail. Supposing that they had retreated back to Camp Beauregard, Gen. Wallace then sent a messenger ordering us to await further orders. Three days' provisions were then ordered, and Gen. Wallace intended following them up, and routing them from their position at Beauregard; but fearing that reinforcements would arrive from Columbus, which would make similar requisitions necessary from this place, and thereby delay our advance, he decided to halt. He then ordered the troops to fall back to the position at Beauregard, which is contrary to orders at this post. Gen. Smith deemed it prudent to order the entire force back.
